On the day after Christmas last year, Richie Incognito won something called the Good Guy Award by vote of the South Florida chapter of the Pro Football Writers Association. That's right, sportswriters decided Incognito and Reggie Bush were the two most cooperative and professional members of the Miami Dolphins. Which just goes to show you how pragmatic we all can be. It didn't matter what a total raging jackass Incognito apparently was to his competitors and even a few of his co-workers on the field and in the locker room. The writers just wanted to reward the NFL's dirtiest player (named by fellow players in 2009) for repeatedly showing up and answering their questions with reasonable eloquence. See, we don't really care as long as our own needs are filled. Neither did three NFL teams. Neither did two college football programs. And when one had finally had enough of his crap, somebody else was always willing to step up and take a shot on Incognito. Because he helped fill up the seats and turn on the TVs. Those days may be over. Or maybe not; we'll see. Because according to ESPN's NFL reporters, an audio tape exists of Incognito using a racial epithet against teammate Jonathan Martin. He also reportedly threatened his life and that of his family. That's the only thing that's finally slowing this runaway train. And even that might not stop it. But now the NFL is involved and the Dolphins are covering their back doors and people are talking about bullying, as if that's ever been an issue in NFL or college locker rooms. I find the entire spectacle laughable. For those of you under some other impression about what high-level football is, let's clear it up: It's all about violence, the threat of more violent violence and the art of effective intimidation. Despite recent attempts at rule changes and interpretations, it is not a video game. It may look that way on TV. It isn't. Richie Incognito has been an effective intimidator, cheap-shot artist and one of the dirtiest players on any field he's tread for the last dozen years since he showed up as a freshman starter on the offensive line at Nebraska. He has been thrown out of games, off of teams, screamed at his own coaches during games and piled up unsportsmanlike conduct and personal fouls every season. But he could always block like a bad-ass. The first time I noticed him was during the 2

002 Nebraska game at Beaver Stadium in which Penn State blew out Frank Solich's Cornhuskers 40-7. During a pick-six by PSU corner Richard Gardner that made the score 26-7, Incognito took the opportunity to shrewdly while the play was going the other way and the officials were presumably distracted to take a sucker punch at PSU defensive end Jeremiah Davis. He was thrown out of the game. He had spat upon an Arizona State player three weeks before that. He later turned the tide of a game against Colorado with a late hit and the Huskers lost. By now, you've heard Incognito's litany of transgressions since. Solich had enough and dumped him after, among other incidents, he decked a teammate. UO coach Mike Bellotti got rid of him in 2004 before he even suited up. The Rams released him after he head-butted two Tennessee Titans and then ranted at his own St. Louis head coach Steve Spagnuolo. The Bills ponied up but then wouldn't resign him. The Dolphins have tolerated him the last three seasons because, hey, he made the Pro Bowl last year. He keeps finding work. Would Incognito be earning a 7-figure check in any other realm? Would he be making even a decent living doing anything else? Debatable. You can only make so much as a bouncer or an arm-breaker for the mob. And yet football keeps welcoming him back. Why is this surprising? Why is anyone shocked? I'm not implying here that most or even many major-college or pro players are as out of their minds as Incognito. They aren't. I'm only saying that such behavior will often go not only un-reprimanded but rewarded. If you can play, any antisocial behavior will be overlooked or at least rationalized, even if it's borderline psychotic. Football at the highest level welcomes sociopaths. As long as they don't cross certain public relations boundaries that threaten the game's or a team's bottom line. Then, and only then, does football have a problem with people like Richie Incognito. The fact is, we like our violence and we like it with an edge. And if once in a while, some crazy outlier takes his helmet off and swings it at another player or stomps on somebody after the whistle, hey, it's great cooler talk after that dreary Monday morning status meeting, right? And all of us writers and bloggers have something to tee up and get page hits (with an accompanying video), right? I'm doing it now. And so, we will wring

So Jerry Jones and the Cowboys can take solace in knowing they made Walden a stronger person. But something tells me they'd prefer having him line up opposite DeMarcus Ware next season.

At the heart of the "unacceptable" effort was Lesters inability to keep the ball down -- a point he harped on, who walked three and struck out two,Game notes When Encarnacion's bat shattered on his groundout in the first inning, It was sort of like watching an entire season's worth of Rob Deer at-bats. and the other principals in Major League Baseball's Biogenesis investigation are under the microscope this summer and facing a handful of potential outcomes -- from vindication to partial absolution to lengthy suspensions to a Rafael Palmeiro-like "Maybe we should close the blinds and never show our faces in public again" brand of humiliation. The stakes are high which helps explain why this story is taking a while to unfold. MLB is in the midst of interviewing the 20 or so players enmeshed in the Biogenesis web and sources say it's likely to be several more weeks before the commissioner's office is ready to levy any discipline. Then an appeal process is inevitable which means this saga will probably drag on into the season's dog days or even the offseason. Like all scandals the Biogenesis case is marked by fits and stops and hot-button revelations. Fans get worked into a lather when Brian Cashman lashes out at A-Rod for rogue tweeting or Frank Thomas shares his belief that PED users shouldn't be allowed to sully the premises in Cooperstown. Then gets four hits or an umpire blows a big call and the public's attention drifts until the next HGH news hits the streets and the chatter begins anew. Fans who pronounce themselves tired of the steroid issue will unfortunately have a lot more to digest in the coming weeks and months. The results will also be monitored closely in big league clubhouses where players share more than an obligation to periodically pee in a cup. Since the start of spring training I've talked to numerous big leaguers about Biogenesis and the ongoing specter of PED use and found that their attitudes generally mirror those of fans and society in general. Most players want a clean game and they're sick of the assumption that "everybody cheats." Everybody doesn't cheat and baseball players have shown their commitment to beefing up their testing program by first agreeing to modifications in the middle of a labor agreement and then becoming the first athletes in any major professional sport to agree to in-season blood testing for HGH.

Retro Jordans for sale

The testing isn't foolproof but baseball is grappling with the same problems that bedevil the Olympics, cycling and the other major team sports: The testing procedures in place simply aren't up to the level of some athletes who are willing to go to great lengths to try to beat them. It's more a question of science than commitment. Although much of the attention has focused on Bug Selig's legacy, Braun's reputation and A-Rod's long-term financial future, the Biogenesis mess poses a special challenge for the Major League Baseball Players Association which has to deal with two distinct responsibilities: While advocating for a stronger drug prevention program at the behest of its members, the union is simultaneously protecting the rights of players who may or may not have tried to beat the system. Whenever MLB interviews a player suspected of wrongdoing, at least one MLBPA attorney is present along with the player's individual counsel. "There's no question we have two things we're trying to accomplish here," said Michael Weiner, the union's executive director. "On the one hand we're defending players who have a defense. On the other hand we have an obligation to enforce the joint drug program. If we have evidence that a player violated the program then we have to do something about it. It's that a conflict. I could imagine circumstances where it could be a conflict. But that's what a union does all the time and that's what we're doing here. It's not much different than what we've done in the past. It's just higher-profile, I guess." A changing tone. You don't have to go back too far to find a union that was at worst obstructionist and at the very least tone-deaf to public perception on the subject of drug testing. Rick Helling earned a special mention in Joe Torre's book for standing up at meetings and decrying the evils of steroid use while his peers felt either powerless to speak their minds or cowed into submission. Helling was a fastball pitcher who was years ahead of the curve. "Everybody wants a level playing field. We're not in meetings saying 'Let's make sure they don't do this.' We've talked about increasing penalties. Players are proactive. It's easy for fans to think 'The players just want to get away with it.' But that's not the case" -- Nationals pitcher and player representative Drew Storen. Now Helling works for the union as a special assistant and players are lining up to publicly opine on the issue and are among the cheap foamposite prominent big leaguers who in recent weeks have come out in favor of stronger penalties for PED users. With every voice that gets added to the chorus it begins to sound more like a crusade. "Everybody wants a level playing field," said pitcher the Washington Nationals' player representative. "We're not in meetings saying 'Let's make sure they don't do this.' We've talked about increasing penalties. Players are proactive. It's easy for fans to think 'The players just want to get away with it.' But that's not the case." No question some players felt skeptical, resentful or downright angry in the spring of 2012 when Braun appealed a 50-game suspension for elevated levels of testosterone and then questioned the integrity of his sample collector during a news conference. Did a substantial number of players think that Braun "lawyered" his way out of a bind and escaped on a technicality or two? Absolutely. But the issues in the Braun grievance hit closer to home when players viewed them from a more personal slant. Weiner and the union leaders asked players "If it were your sample and there was a glitch in the system that might contribute to a false positive, wouldn't you want to make sure the system was airtight?" MLB and the union to their credit worked together to address the problem and tightened up many of the testing procedures in question to make sure some issues didn't reoccur. Nevertheless, there's a degree of trust involved in any drug-testing program and it's jeopardized by news leaks that tarnish players regardless of how events play out. Once ESPN broke the news of Braun's disputed test before the 2012 season he could never fully reclaim his reputation And now history is repeating itself twenty-fold with the Biogenesis revelations which have dogged the players in question since the Miami New Times first reported on Tony Bosch and the activities at his anti-aging clinic in Coral Gables Fla, you don't want to have a bad name or be looked upon in a negative light,"Sabathia finished the regular season at 19-8 with a 3. in which Sabathia pitched in relief for the first time in his career, he stepped over the railing and onto the field to celebrate the win with the team as "I Love L. The NBA Development League is that often at the present time testing an all in one few potential game-changing laws and regulations gorgeous honeymoons as well going to be the NBA.? These include going to be the international goaltending idea all of these allows a multi function player to blow the ball away now that you've got it has touched going to be the blackberry mobile phones,a three-minute overtime,nike nfl jersey,cost free live available on the web streaming having to do with all of them are its games, and a multi functional playoff format everywhere in the all of which going to be the division winners can decide upon all of which concerning the remaining postseason teams they will face in the first attack.? Any no less than one of many of these information may or may not become a multi functional part concerning the NBA as part of your severe.? So I having got thinking, what several laws and regulations would certainly make the NBA a good deal more exciting to understand more about watch?? Here are about three potential suggestion changes I came all the way up with:

1. Half Court Shots = five points. The three-point line was an all in one big deal when a resource box was before anything else instituted on such basis as going to be the American Basketball Association throughout the 1968.? In fact,nike nfl jerseys leaked, that was some form of having to do with the biggest reasons going to be the ABA might not compete so that you have the a lot more established NBA, leading to understand more about the merger backwards and forwards going to be the dozens.? Three-pointers added a nationwide many of the new dimension to learn more about the game, allowing a great deal more scoring in line with game and creating another area along with players for more information about specialize on.

Turning the half court line into the five-point line might should the same thing,football jersey size chart, although it wouldn't have quite an all in one dramatic affect.? Think about all going to be the potential. Four or at least five look up games allowing you to have objective a multi function a little a few moments left can be nail-biters instead regarding practically a lot more than.? Big leads late in the game is that the never be safe.? Each team is the factthat the should a multi function specialized five-point photographer that would certainly keep opponents on their toes ?C maybe any of those crazy mascots which of you make insane shots at halftime is that the become a part about the team.? Innovative coaches is the fact that go and buy new strategies and plays that keep using the five-point line for more information regarding their advantage. And they all are any of those hours concerning playing HORSE and shooting 3/4 court of law shots would finally pay off.

2. Flagrant Flopping. Every fan hates aspect when a player throughout the the opposing team failures dramatically and gets going to be the disagreeable call they happen to have been are you looking for.? Even for those times when a multi function player all on your own team does it,you can??t told me your family don??t feel a multi function little bit ashamed.? I??m for no reason contrary for additional details on selling a multi functional call ?C as well as for example,Broncos Nike NFL Jerseys, I watched Shaq get involved with to educate yourself regarding take a multi functional charge going to be the numerous other good night all of these is this : a miracle on the and regarding itself), and the person fell backwards as soon as the boyfriend or husband hit kale despite the fact that all your family know she / he might not have stood his ground.? But there is always that a multi functional difference forward and backward promoting a multi functional call and masquerading all your family members got worn out as part of your face. I don??t blame going to be the referees as well as for calling bad fouls sometimes because the game is the reason that played at all of these a and there speed but aspect is this : frustrating for more information on schedulae an appoitment with players can get rewarded allowing you to have cost free rugs and for their disgusting displays concerning acting.

The solution Give each team longer than one ??challenges??,kids football jersey,some of these as everywhere over the football,nfl football jerseys cheap,in keeping with game during which time going to be the coach challenges the call and refs take 30 a few moments to watch an all in one replay after which you can decide if aspect was an all in one disagreeable or even a falter.? If element really was a multi function foul,the team which of you challenged loses a multi function a period of time on the town If aspect was a multi function flop,nfl team jerseys,it counts a little as though a multi function flagrant unpleasant ?C the non-offending team gets quite a few shots and the ball. The NBA said back on the 2008 that players will most likely be fined as well as flopping,but as far as I know for no reason a multi function single fine has been handed around town on the in excess of quite a few some time.? By putting this option as part of your coaches?? hands and punishing offenders from top to bottom games, something not only can they finally be done to understand more about stop those NBA drama queens from disgracing going to be the game regarding basketball.

3. Referee Training/Salaries. Did your family know NBA refs single purpose make $90,000 for more information on $225,cheap nfl authentic jerseys,000 a multi functional year? That may a powerful i like your for more information on all your family and my hand,nfl throwback jersey,but and when you consider how do we influential they are for more information on the entire league,pink football jersey, they shouldn??t be the case getting paid a lot fewer than half concerning going to be the minimum salary for players ($473,604).? And so that you have the amount about money the NBA likes for more information about take your time throughout the pieces of art any of these as going to be the NBA D-League and WNBA, they should be the case more than willing to educate yourself regarding invest in among the sort about institution for additional details on help to increase their officiating,and when you consider element is the reason that arguably the biggest down side to this they have faced as part of your last decade.? Referees each have their one of a kind size and shapes and behavior patterns,but that shouldn??t be the case the case ?C league officials are going to want to educate yourself regarding have ach and every solid standards that are adhered to explore every good night and one of the more the NBA can institute and develop any sexual standards.? The current refs need to panic about their best, and I are aware of that a resource box is always a multi functional very difficult if you value,football jerseys custom,but take heart the NBA needs to take things you can do to learn more about ensure possibilities skillfull and celebrities and others well-trained officials are around town on its courts.? More rigorous training programs that have been seen in your the chances are greater salaries is probably the most effective way to explore need to bother about that.

I are aware of that you??re a multi functional little fast moving at going to be the moment Mr. Stern,football jersey creator,but take heart now that you've got a few of these CBA discussions are out of the way,nike football jersey,might all your family give you the a few of these rule changes a multi function day of the week regarding your a period of time Thank you.
